

About the Canadian Association of Cardiovascular Prevention and Rehabilitation

The Canadian Association of Cardiovascular Prevention and Rehabilitation (CACPR) is a national non-profit organization comprised of interdisciplinary health professionals dedicated to excellence in the provision of cardiovascular care. Our focus is enhancing knowledge, clinical expertise and research for those who work in cardiovascular prevention and rehabilitation.

CACPR provides numerous opportunities to interact and engage with an influential community of cardiovascular prevention and rehabilitation professionals. In the rapidly changing health care environment, our members look to CACPR to help educate and promote emerging trends in professional education and clinical innovation. CACPR membership consists of an array of disciplines involved in cardiovascular health including: nurses, physiotherapists, exercise physiologists, dietitians, psychologists, cardiologists, internal medicine specialists, family physicians and nurse practitioners, researchers, students and program administrators.

CACPR offers ongoing support to promote the delivery of evidence based cardiovascular care in Canada:

- Annual Spring Conference highlighting the latest clinical and research topics
- Canadian Cardiovascular Society Annual Symposium
 - CACPR coordinates the prevention and rehabilitation track
- CACPR monthly webinar series with leading professionals and researchers
- Publishes Guidelines for Cardiovascular Rehabilitation and Prevention in Canada
- Cardiovascular Rehabilitation Professional Education Modules
- CV Edge publication for Cardiovascular Rehabilitation Professionals
- Networking opportunities for professionals
- Responsive Professional guidance and support with Covid-19 pandemic
